Children have the right to their own identity – an official record of who they are which includes their name, nationality and family relations. No one should take this away from them. If this happens, governments must help children to quickly get their identity back.

Children should not be separated from their parents unless they are not being properly looked after – for example, if a parent hurts or does not take care of a child. Children whose parents don’t live together should stay in contact with both parents unless this might harm the child.

Children should never be punished in a way that harms them. This includes not being locked up in a cell and not being tortured. They should always have a parent or another adult to guide them so that as they grow up, they learn to properly use this right.

Children can choose their own thoughts, opinions and religion, but this should not stop other people from enjoying their rights. Parents can guide children so that as they grow up, they learn to properly use this right.

Children who move from their home country as refugees (because it was not safe for them to stay there) should get help and protection and have the same rights as children born in that country.

Children’s education should help them to fully develop their personalities, talents and abilities. It should teach them to understand their own rights, and to respect other people’s rights, cultures and differences. It should help them to live peacefully and protect the environment.

Children who are accused of breaking the law should not be killed, tortured, treated cruelly, put in prison forever, or put in prison with adults. Prison should always be the last choice and only for the shortest possible time. Children in prison should have legal help and be able to stay in contact with their family.

Children have the right to be protected from sexual exploitation (being taken advantage of), sexual abuse, including by people forcing children to have sex for money, or making sexual pictures or films of them.

Governments should protect children from taking, making, carrying or selling harmful drugs.

The government should ensure that children are never taken advantage of. Governments must protect children from sexual exploitation (being taken advantage of) and sexual abuse, including by people forcing children to have sex for money, or making sexual pictures or films of them.

Governments must ensure that children are not kidnapped or sold, or taken to other countries or places to be exploited (taken advantage of).
